

The seventeen poems in this collection are mainly of a humorous bent. They are all brand new. None of them have been published in any of the authors previous collections. Although some liberties have been taken, I guess they could be described as halfway traditional poems. For example: Although the lines occasionally tend to be of varying length, they are otherwise metrical and all of them rhyme. The poets emphasis is on both the way a poem reads and how it looks, although this pictorial quality may not always be apparent in the Kindle version.
