As the core of psychoanalytic hypotheses, the theory of instinctual drives and its connection to affects in general and to anxiety in particular are discussed. Over time, we develop schemas and attitudes to help us better understand and more successfully interact with others. Affect refers to the feelings that we experience as part of life and includes both moods and emotions. Social behavior is influenced by principles of reciprocal altruism and social exchange. The influence of an individual's needs and desires both have a strong impact on the direction of their behavior. Motivation is based on your emotions and achievement-related goals. These basic physiological motivational drives affect our natural behavior in different environments. Behavior is different from emotions but is very strongly influenced by them. One way that behavior is affected by emotions is through motivation, which drives a person's behavior. Emotions like frustration and boredom can lower motivation and, thus, lower the chance that we will act.

Clark Hull's drive-reduction theory suggests that human motivation is rooted in biological needs that lead to drives that motivate behavior. to understand the effect his work had on psychology and to see how other theorists.
